Main Areas

Our activities can be divided into four areas:

- Introductory training
- Vocational training
- Continued training
- Mapping and validation

Educational Ethos

1. The student at the centre

The needs and prerequisites of the student are always at the centre. We utilise the skills students obtained from their previous experiences of work, studies and other activities in life. We tailor the teaching to the student's method of learning. We want students to be well-prepared for their work after undertaking their training and be able to convert the goals they achieved during training into practice.

2. Preparation for lifelong learning

We want students to see their training as the start of lifelong learning. The National Board of Health and Welfare advocates evidence-based health care, that is, practices and procedures that have scientific support. It is therefore important that our students are trained in keeping up-to-date with what's new in health care, to learn to find out about the latest developments and to critically examine the credibility of sources.

3. Quality and development

We want to guarantee that students receive the knowledge to which they are entitled. We want present or future employers to feel confident that their employees have achieved the goals set and feel secure in their professional capacity. We are flexible, listen to suggestions and develop new methods to achieve educational quality.

Staff

All our principal lecturers are qualified health care lecturers. We have also large network of specialists in different fields of healthcare.
